MOUNTAIN VIEW.

Situated on the Southern Pacific R. R., twelve miles north-west of San Jose. Old Mountain View, a flourishing little place, is about one mile from the station, and really the most prosperous part of the town. It has two churches—a Methodist and Cumberland Presbyterian, Odd Fellows' Hall; also good school. Its support is agricultural. There are about two hundred and eighty votes polled.

OLD MOUNTAIN VIEW, SANTA CLARA CO., CAL.

NEW ALMADEN.

Post-office. A quicksilver mining town, dependent for its existence on the Quicksilver Mining Co of New York, of which company J. B. Randol is the resident superintendent. The mine, reduction works, road, store, hotel, stage line, telegraph office, church, and town site are owned by the corporation; and the people of the camp, numbering nearly one thousand, are controlled by the powers that be, to such an extent as to scarcely credit belief. We arrived at the place late in the evening, with a tired team and feeling rather the worse for a day's travel and hard work on the road. The only livery accommodations in the town are at the stage barn, where we were told that the "mighty superintendent" had forbidden the reception of strangers' teams, because two political stump speakers had stopped over night, some time before, and advanced opinions that did chime in with those of the superintendent. In the same way, it was necessary for the hotel man to go to headquarters and get the permission of some great personage, without which we actually could not have tarried in the place to eat and sleep, but would have had to turn around then and there and seek more hospitable quarters six miles distant. In the course of our business, it was necessary for us to drive over a piece of the company's road, up the hill to the mine, for which we first obtained permission. On coming down again, we were eagerly assailed by the enslaved puppet of the telegraph office for what we thought an exorbitant toll (considering that no rates of toll are posted on the gate), he remarking, "Yes, this thing works both ways; first
